She graduated from Good Samaritan Hospital in Cincinnati and then worked at the Cleveland Clinic in the recovery room and helped to develop the first intensive care unit. After coming to San Francisco in 1963, she did private duty and industrial nursing for Shell Development. She met her husband, Patrick, in San Francisco through a ski friend. After their children were in school, Sheila went back to get a BA in behavioral science at College of Notre Dame, Belmont, followed by an MA in counseling psychology at Holy Names College in Oakland. Believing in community service, she taught First Aid and Baby and Child Care for the Red Cross, and CPR to police departments. Their daughters were in 4-H, and the family raised three guide dogs for the blind. Sheila and Patrick went to Lourdes, France; Fatima, Portugal and Medjagorje, Yugoslavia. They also enjoyed cruises, touring Europe and relaxing at Lake Tahoe. The Kellys have three children and three grandchildren and moved to SRC for its quiet location and park-like setting.
